provincetown artist's studio

i feel like a proud mama today. my favorite cape cod architecture firm, hammer architects, is featured in the july/august publication of design new england! mark hammer and don dirocco's revival of a provincetown artist's studio is the star of the issue and they've been kind enough to share the home's before photo with raenovate readers!

mark and don seamlessly connected the tucked away p-town property's 1920's garage and 1960's 600 square foot house. originally built by an architecture professor and his students as a summer project, the site has come full circle with hammer architects' improvements. their renovation has provided the homeowners with a new master bedroom suite, two bathrooms, a large eat-in kitchen, a living room with a skylight monitor and a painting studio with its own separate street entrance.

RAENOVATE updated daily, raenovate is dedicated to bringing you a glimpse of all things reinvigorated, refreshed, and revived.

my summer is not complete without spending a week on cape cod and cape cod is not complete without hammer architects. the steadfast firm has captured the essence of cape cod and displays this charm in every single project they handle. their recent truvo kitchen redesign is brimming with charisma. the original awkward layout was reconfigured in order to create a clear delineation between the living room, kitchen, and dining areas. the custom cabinetry functions both as kitchen cabinets and room dividing furniture. i'm especially in love with the hanging pot rack, tea cup hooks, slate backsplash, and boatloads of natural light.

it's hammer time! my favorite new england architect, mark hammer, is at it again...this time redesigning a truro, massachusetts mid-century modern home. located within the cape cod national seashore park, the property overlooks two kettle ponds. in order to modernize the residence and take advantage of the waterfront views, hammer architects created an addition featuring a kitchen, master suite, study, and roof deck. they also revamped the existing structure, updating the living/dining room and two guest bedrooms. 'you can't touch this' renovation!

the new england region of the united states feels like home. i'm a born and bred jersey girl, but when i enter yankee doodle territory i feel content. i'd love to live there one day and when i do i'd like to live in a home ala hammer architects.

i cannot get enough of their renovated watch hill, rhode island house, 'beach meadows'. built in typical nineteenth century fashion, the nine bedroom home consisted of disconnected spaces, oriented inwards, often ignoring views of block island sound. fortunately hammer architects knew just how to revive the turn of the century oceanfront residence. the interior of the house was reconfigured to be more open with new vistas directed towards the water views. additions and alterations dating back to the 1960's were removed and replaced with a large family room and open kitchen; and the exterior was redesigned and extensively detailed in my favorite style, classic shingle.

i'd especially like to thank mark hammer, founder of hammer architects for sending me photos from his massachusetts firm!
